FOREWORD

This book is a continuation of a work commenced originally when I was on staff at the Office of Legislative Counsel. The work has been a ‘labor of love’ of mine for several decades now. The 2013 edition was a significantly expanded and revised version of that initial work. The 2018 edition represents a continuation of the effort to keep the materials up to date. Grateful acknowledgement and appreciation is expressed to Mr. Rick Ruskell, Legislative Counsel of the Georgia General Assembly, for his ongoing cooperation, support, and assistance in helping keep this invaluable resource available and current.

The population Act was and remains a deceptive mechanism in Georgia through which the general law of the state is changed for particular municipalities or counties. The Constitution specifically prohibits the enactment of local or special laws in cases for which provision has been made by general law. A population Act, euphemistically known as a general law of local application, purports to be a ‘valid’ method by which this crystal clear prohibition can be ignored.

The courts of this state have remained, for the most part, unpersuaded by the legal fiction put forth by population Acts. Under cases such as Dougherty County v. Bush, 227 Ga. 137 (1971); Strickland v. Richmond County, 243 Ga. 462 (1979); & Board of Commissioners v. Clayton County School District, 250 Ga. 244 (1982); and many others, a test is used to analyze the dubious validity of these measures. The test consists of three questions regarding legislation which classified political subdivisions by population. First, is the classification open ended so as to allow subdivisions to come into and fall out of the classification? Second, does it apply only to a single entity? Third, is the classifying device reasonably related to the purpose of the legislation? Very few population Acts comply with this test. Regardless of their unconstitutionality in the eyes of the courts, the use of this legislative ‘tool’ continued.

An attempt to address the issue was made when the Constitution of 1983 was adopted. It contained a new prohibition found in Art. III, Sec. VI, Para. IV(b) which forbade the passage of population bills. However, the prohibition was not applicable to all population Acts, but was limited only to population bills “as defined by the General Assembly”. The General Assembly followed with an implementing general law. The entire text of this statute, O.C.G.A. 28-1-15, follows this Foreword and warrants a thorough perusal. The breadth and scope of this Code section has essentially shut the door on the enactment of new population Acts. Population Acts enacted prior to 1997 remain in place, at least until challenged in court or repealed by the General Assembly.

While substantive amendment is not permitted, the brackets may be revised to remain applicable to the target political subdivisions. There is a caveat that must be expressed on this point. Under paragraph (5) of subsection (d) of O.C.G.A. 28-1-15, a ‘remain applicable’ amendment means that the provisions remain applicable to those political subdivisions to which the provisions applied immediately prior to the time the most recent census figures became available. The most recent census figures, for the most part, became effective July 1, 2012. Thus, a ‘remain applicable’ amendment is limited in function to applying to political subdivisions to which a provision applied immediately prior to July 1, 2012. As a practical matter, this means that a ‘remain applicable’ amendment can operate to continue applicability ONLY regarding the affected political subdivisions from the 2000 census to the 2010 census. If a political subdivision failed to update population brackets from the 1990 census to the 2000 census, then it is now too late to update from the 1990 census to the 2010 census if different political subdivisions are involved. To illustrate by example, suppose a population Act applied to County A under the 1990 census. Under the 2000 census, that population Act applied to Counties A & B. No ‘remain applicable’ amendment was done at the time the 2000 census figures became effective. Under the 2010 census, the population Act still applies to Counties A & B. It is no longer possible to do a ‘remain applicable’ amendment to eliminate the applicability to County B. This is because immediately prior to July 1, 2012, the population Act applied to Counties A & B.

Repeals of these Acts have taken the form of individual repeals as well as a bill containing a large number of repeals, Ga. L. 2001, p. 1473. One might immediately inquire how such a mass repealer passes muster under Art. III, Sec. V, Para. III of the Constitution which provides that “(n)o bill shall pass which refers to more than one subject matter or contains matter different from what is expressed in the title thereof.” In fact, the use of this type of repealer has withstood judicial scrutiny on that very basis in Brd. Of Public Edu. For the City of Savannah & Chatham Co. v. Hair, 276 Ga. 575 (2003).

The 2010 decennial census has been conducted and governing authorities as well as city and county attorneys may wish to examine carefully whether population Acts apply, or don’t apply, to their political subdivisions. A comprehensive User’s Guide has been included to assist in any review which may be conducted. Local officials should remain mindful of the varying dates regarding when the 2010 decennial census figures became applicable to Georgia statutes. These dates are specified in O.C.G.A. 1-3-1(d)(2) and this text is set forth for the convenience and ready reference of the reader immediately following this Foreword.

This publication is current through the 2018 regular session of the General Assembly and it is my sincere hope that the book will be an informative and useful research tool for all who have occasion to travel through its pages. It is my intention that this volume not be a static publication. Updated, electronic copies will continue to be provided at www.gmanet.com and www.accg.org, for the convenience and accessibility of interested local officials and local government attorneys. Please be encouraged to point out any errors that you may find so that they may be corrected in the subsequent edition of this book. I hope you will e-mail them to me at jscheuer@accg.org or submit them directly to me at ACCG, 191 Peachtree Street NE, Suite 700, Atlanta, Georgia 30303.

Please remain mindful that this book is solely and exclusively for informational purposes. The review remarks cannot and do not reflect a detailed or thorough understanding of the governmental operations, political atmosphere, and social needs of each locality. Consequently, nothing stated in these pages either constitutes or should be viewed as constituting a legal opinion.

SPECIAL DEDICATION

A LONG overdue acknowledgement and tipping of my hat is expressed to Ms. Lynn Whitten, Deputy Legislative Counsel of the Georgia General Assembly, for her MANY years of cooperation, support, and assistance in the publication of this book. Without her help, I don’t know what I would have done. I extend my deepest and most profound thanks to a skilled bill drafter, a valued colleague, and a treasured and dear friend. I wish you every success in the next chapter of your life. Your absence will be felt keenly and make the General Assembly a much poorer place. It has been a profound honor to have worked with you and I bid you farewell and hope your path takes you to the “Second star to the right and straight on til morning.”

EFFECTIVE DATES OF CENSUS

(Current through July 1, 2018)

For purposes of Georgia statutes, the effective dates of the census are provided in O.C.G.A. Section 1-3-1(d)(2), relating to construction of statutes generally. That portion of the Code section reads as follows:

(2) CENSUS. Whenever there is used in the statutory law of this state the term “federal census,” “United States census,” “decennial census,” or similar words referring to the official census conducted every ten years by the United States of America or any agency thereof as required by Article I, Section II, Paragraph III of the Constitution of the United States, the effective date of such census for the purpose of making operative and of force any statutory law of this state shall be determined as follows:

(A) The effective date of the census shall be July 1 of the first year after the year in which the census is conducted, for the purpose of making operative and of force the following laws:

- (i) Code Section 15-16-20;
- (ii) Code Sections 15-6-88 through 15-6-91;
- (iii) Code Section 48-5-183;
- (iv) Code Sections 15-9-63 through 15-9-66;
- (v) Code Section 36-5-25;
- (vi) Code Section 15-10-23; and
- (vii) Code Section 45-16-11;

provided, however, that if a county’s population decreases according to a more recent census below its population according to an earlier census, then, notwithstanding any other provision of law, any officer who is compensated under a law specified in this subparagraph and who is in office on the date specified in this subparagraph shall continue during his entire tenure in such office (including any future terms of office in such office) to be compensated on the basis of the county’s population according to such earlier census;

(B) For purposes of any program of grants of state funds to local governments, the effective date of the census shall be July 1 of the first year after the year in which the census is conducted;

(C) For the purpose of reconstituting the membership of any constitutional or statutory board, commission, or body whose members are appointed from congressional districts, the effective date of the census shall be January 1 of the third year after the year in which the census is conducted;

(D) The effective date of the census shall be July 1 of the second year after the year in which the census is conducted for the purpose of making operative and of force all other statutory laws which do not expressly provide otherwise.

O.C.G.A. Section 28-1-15

(Current through July 1, 2018)

(a) This Code section is passed pursuant to the authority of Article III, Section VI, Paragraph IV, subparagraph (b) of the Constitution, and no population bill shall be passed and no bill using classification by population as a means of determining the applicability of any bill or law to any political subdivision or group of political subdivisions may expressly or impliedly amend, modify, supersede, or repeal this Code section.

(b) As used in this Code section, "political subdivision" means any county, municipality, county school district, independent school district, judicial circuit, militia district, or any other geographical area of the state which does not include the entire area of the state.

(c) Except as provided in this subsection, "population bill" means any bill using classification by population as a means of determining the applicability of any bill or law to any political subdivision or group of political subdivisions of the state. "Population bill" shall not include the following:

(1) A bill applicable to one specified type of political subdivision and containing a combination of population classifications which includes the population of and affects all political subdivisions of the type specified, including but not limited to state-wide minimum salary bills for county officers;

(2) A bill classifying political subdivisions having less than a specified population and affecting three or more such political subdivisions; provided, however, that this paragraph shall not apply to or affect the legality of any bills classifying political subdivisions having less than a specified population enacted prior to July 1, 1988, or which become effective July 1, 1988;

(3) A bill classifying political subdivisions having more than a specified population and affecting three or more such political subdivisions; provided, however, that this paragraph shall not apply to or affect:

(A) The legality of any bills classifying political subdivisions having more than a specified population enacted prior to July 1, 1988, or which become effective July 1, 1988; or

(B) The passage or legality of any bills amending bills referred to in subparagraph (A) of this paragraph with respect to specific subject matter contained in such bills on July 1, 1988;

(4) A bill classifying political subdivisions on the basis of the population of standard metropolitan statistical areas and affecting three or more such political subdivisions; provided, however, that this paragraph shall not apply to or affect the legality of any bills classifying on the basis of the population of standard metropolitan statistical areas enacted prior to July 1, 1988, or which become effective July 1, 1988;

(5) A bill amending a law which classifies political subdivisions on the basis of population if that amendment merely changes the population classification of such law so as to permit that law to remain applicable to those political subdivisions to which that law was applicable immediately prior to the time the most recent census figures became applicable to those political subdivisions; or

(6) A bill repealing a law which classifies on the basis of population.

In order to be permissible under the foregoing exceptions, a bill must fit within only one of the foregoing exceptions; and any bill which uses two or more of the foregoing classification devices shall be a prohibited "population bill."

(c.1) (1) A population bill shall also mean any bill using classification by population as a means of determining the applicability of any bill or law to any political subdivision or group of political subdivisions of the state with respect to the following:

(A) The salary of any officer, official, or employee of a county, municipality, or other political subdivision; provided, however, that the limitation provided for in this subparagraph shall not apply to state-wide minimum salary bills for county officers which are authorized under paragraph (1) of subsection (c) of this Code section; or

(B) The property, affairs, or operation of the governing authority of a county or municipality, including, but not limited to, any matters pertaining to municipal annexation, deannexation, incorporation, or dissolution.

(2) Except as provided in subparagraph (A) of paragraph (1) of this subsection, any population bill which meets any of the classification criteria of this subsection shall be a prohibited population bill even if such bill is described in paragraphs (1) through (4) of subsection (c) of this Code section. Any such bill enacted prior to July 1, 1997, or which became effective July 1, 1997, may thereafter be repealed as authorized under paragraph (6) of subsection (c) of this Code section or may only be amended as authorized under paragraph (5) of subsection (c) of this Code section.

(d) Nothing in this Code section shall be construed to invalidate any judicially imposed requirements for Acts classifying on the basis of population.

USING THIS REFERENCE

First Things First

It is recommended that you flip through the book and familiarize yourself with its overall structure as well as what is inside. The Foreword provides some useful history and background of population Acts. Hopefully a read through of this reference guide which will answer most questions.

Get the Numbers

The second step is to find your county's (or city's) population. There are 2 readily available sources for this information. First, look in Vol. 42A of the O.C.G.A., the local law index. Beginning on page 63 of the 2018 Supplement, you will find an alphabetical listing of all Georgia counties with separate columns detailing the population of each county under the 2010 census as well as every census dating back to the 1930 census. On page 69 of that Supplement, you will find a numerical listing in descending order of each county and its population under the 2010 census. This exact same information may also be found in Volume III of Georgia Laws (the tan colored hard bound compilation of the general and local Acts enacted by the General Assembly) for 2011 or subsequent years. NOTE, if you use Georgia Laws, be certain you are using the most recent year following the 2011 edition. The 2010 set will NOT have the 2010 census numbers in the charts and will only be current through the 2000 census. The most recent year following the 2011 edition will contain any official updates to the census figures.

Identifying the Population Acts that Affect Your County or City

The third step is to go to the Table of Contents immediately following this reference guide. You will find an alphabetical listing of each county (as well as cities). To the right of each county name is a listing of every page in the book on which that county appears. Please note that this listing covers ALL of the census columns and is NOT limited just to the 2010 column. Further, if there is a population Act for a miscellaneous entry, as well as other categories with one exception noted below, and that entry applies to your county, there will be a page reference so noted in the Table of Contents under your county's name. To use this book for a city, simply follow the same path as if researching a county.

Using the listing of pages from the Table of Contents, turn to each listed page and consult the census columns. By simply reviewing the listings of counties under the census columns you can ascertain at a glance whether:

- 1) A population Act that applied to your county under a previous census continues to apply under the 2010 census;
- 2) a population Act that applied to your county under a previous census no longer applies your county under the new 2010 census due to population gain or loss; or
- 3) A population Act that did not apply to you county under a previous census now does apply to your county under the 2010 census due to population gain or loss.

The 2 columns on the right side of the page will give a very brief description of what the population Act does and will include a citation to where the text of the provision can be found. If the population Act is uncodified (i.e. it does not appear in the O.C.G.A.), there will ONLY be a citation to the most recent amendment thereto as found in Georgia Laws. If the population Act has been codified, there will be a Code section citation, as well as a Georgia Laws reference to the most recent amendment thereto.

Note that the listings do not include:

- (1) Minimum salary provisions for county officers like sheriffs or tax commissioners;
- (2) Local constitutional amendments (these are covered in detail in a different publication); or
- (3) Fees or other types of comprehensive bracket schedules that specify bracketed ranges covering all cities or all counties (e.g. Code Section 33-8-8(b)(1)).

If you do NOT see any entries for your county in the Index, DO NOT assume that there are no population Acts. You still need to consult the Broadly Focused Statutes – Counties listings beginning on Page 109. These are listed ONLY by population and NOT by county name since they apply to so many jurisdictions. It is very important that you do not omit this step since there are NUMEROUS population Acts referenced here. Also, be certain to consult the Miscellaneous listings as these contain numerous entries regarding population Acts that apply to all cities in a county of a specified population as well as other classifications.

One might be tempted to simply turn to the part of the book that lists populations close to that of your county. There is a high degree of likelihood that something will get missed if you limit your review to just this method, so I recommend highly that you follow the above steps for the sake of completeness.

Policy Decisions and Legislation

If you determine that your county is impacted either because it no longer is within the correct population range of a desired and previously existing population Act OR because it has found itself now within the population range specified by the population Act and consequently is subject to new and unwanted statutory requirements, then you should consult with your local officials and determine whether it is best to either repeal the population Act OR to seek an amendment to it that keeps the provision applicable only to the jurisdictions which were covered by it immediately prior to the date the new census figures became effective. For the bulk of population Acts, this date is July 1, 2012, but there are several exceptions which are detailed at the beginning of this book on the page, Effective Date of Census. Also, be certain to review the limitation on the use of ‘remain applicable’ amendments. This caveat is covered in detail in the 4th paragraph of the FOREWARD.

Once the policy decision has been made to seek either a repeal or an amendment, then you should consult with a member of the General Assembly who represents your county and request their assistance. The legislator will then take the request to the Office of Legislative Counsel and that office will prepare the appropriate bill. As a final note, please remain mindful that population Acts are NOT local bills. They are general bills of local application and are subject to the constitutional, statutory, and procedural rules and timelines that apply to ALL general bills.
